A model alert indicates unusual market behaviour, not proof of fraud. Fraud or manipulation is described as confirmed only when supported by an official regulatory record.

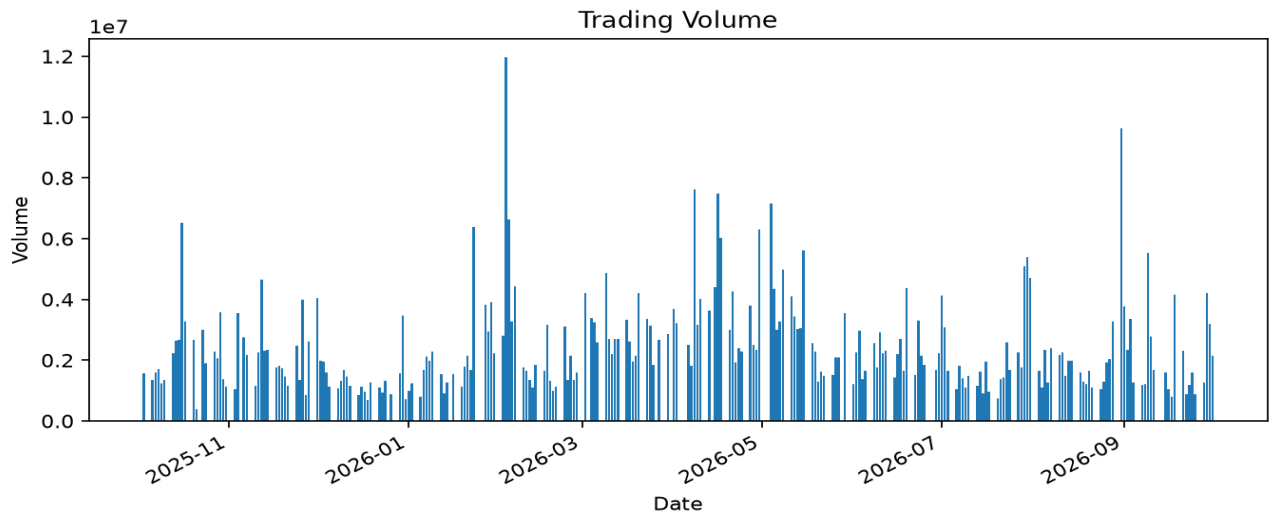

3. Possible Sequence of Events

- Possible build-up phase: trading volume increased above its recent baseline on multiple sessions before the peak alert. This can be consistent with increased accumulation or market interest, but the data alone cannot identify who traded or why.
- Peak alert on 2026-02-03: a +9.10% one-day price move, volume at 5.41x baseline. The concurrence of multiple abnormal indicators is why this date received the highest surveillance score.

10. Limitations and Research Disclaimer

SEBI Sentinel is an academic market-surveillance prototype. Price, volume, delivery, VWAP, trade-count and machine-learning signals can identify unusual trading behaviour, but they cannot establish trader identity, intent, collusion, insider information, or a legal violation. A model-detected alert must not be presented as confirmed fraud. Official misconduct is reported only when supported by an authoritative regulatory record stored in the case database.
